This Week...

This week we have been immersing ourselves in poetry - we really enjoyed performing The Sound Collector by Roger McGough. The adults in the classroom were so impressed that the children were able to learn the poem 'off by heart', and put actions to the words. We hope those parents who were able to come and watch us on Thursday enjoyed it too. The children used the poem to identify verbs and nouns and have created their own versions of the poem. In our Maths work, we have been revising 2D shape, identifying the properties of the shapes and calculating the perimeter of different quadrilaterals. Many children need to keep revising this work, so please help by identifying 2D shapes in the environment and using the vocabulary of sides, vertices, right angles, parallel sides, regular and irregular. We designed our own insulated cups in Science which we will test next week. The children chose their own materials and worked with a partner. Mrs Morris designed and made some recipes with the children on Thursday as part of our Design Technology topic and the children enjoyed trying some samples of French food in our Geography - thank you to those parents who contributed these items.

Class Information

On the 14th October, we will be joining our church family at St Christopher's to celebrate Harvest.

We are hoping that as many Lea Endowed children as possible can join us and indeed, that some children can contribute to the service. Reverend Peter has requested that children take a single item of fruit for the service and any donations of non-perishable food would be gratefully received.

The service will be held at 9.30am - let's raise the roof and celebrate God's wonderful work together.

Next Week - Next week, we shall begin our new class novel, A Medal for Leroy by Michael Morpurgo. I have chosen this story as it is from the viewpoint of a child but focuses on world events - we shall be commemorating 100 years since WW1 in school over the next month so this story fits in nicely. We shall be identifying and creating complex sentences using the book as a model. In our Maths, we shall look at statistics and mental calculations. We will test our insulated cups using data loggers in Science and create book reviews for the Bible in our RE. Mrs Morris will try out some more recipes and be creating a food blog in Computing.
